Biographical Note

Alice Loman Ambrose was born in Lexington, Illinois on November 25, 1906. She was an undergraduate at Millikin University from 1924-1928, graduating with a B.A. in Mathematics and minoring in French. She was Millikin's first straight-A graduate, attending Millikin on the S.E. McClelland scholarship all four years. She had a campus job as a departmental assistant in mathematics her junior year, and in English her senior year. She also earned money through academic awards, including the College Club Award, the Intercollegiate Peace Association state essay contest, and multiple French contest prizes. Ambrose was active in several campus groups, including the senior honorary society Pi Mu Theta, the YWCA, the Conant Society, and the Mathematics Club. She was also part of the Decaturian reportorial staff for two years and was heavily involved with the French Club, "Le Cercle Francais," serving as the club's president her senior year. Following her time at Millikin, she attended the University of Wisconsin, Madison and Cambridge University in England (where she studied under Ludwig Wittgenstein), earning both a master's and PhD in philosophy by 1932, and her second PhD in 1938. The majority of her teaching career was spent at Smith College, from which she retired in 1972. Along with her husband, Morris Lazerowitz, she wrote several books about philosophy, including "Fundamentals of Symbolic Logic."
