PAMPHLETS ON THE FIRST WORLD WAR: AN ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

by Donald Hendricks, Director of Libraries, Sam
Houston State College, Huntsville, Texas

Recognition of special collections in academic libraries is too often limited to larger institutions. Such guides as Lee Ash's Subject Collections¹ and the American Library Directory² usually mention only extensive collections in great libraries. Few surveys have been made of materials in small colleges and universities. Too, smaller institutions seldom publish any notice of special bibliographical items, so their existence would not have been noted in Robert B. Downs' American Library Resources; a Bibliographical Guide.³

Many instances can be cited of loyal faculty members and alumni giving the results of life-long collecting interest to a smaller library. Unusual materials, particularly if they form a collective body of information, can be used more effectively if knowledge of such resources is widely circulated. These collections of special areas of study can decidedly enrich the work of individual students and advanced scholars.

³Downs, Robert B. American Library Resources; A Bibliography Guide. Chicago, American Library Association, 1951.

The following bibliography, thus, is an attempt to make an important collection known. These pamphlets are owned by Millikin University in Decatur, Illinois. The collection is fully cataloged and is in excellent condition. There are about five hundred items listed here, with annotations when the title was not deemed sufficient to convey the attitude or nature of the piece.

No attempt has been made to evaluate or comment on the historical importance of these pamphlets; a number of scholars in the field have done some work with them, and there seems to be a growing interest in the period. Many of the pamphlets are pure propaganda pieces; and many atrocity accounts, some illustrated, are represented.

The collection is not as large as those available at the New York Public Library or the Library of Congress, but acquaintance with its contents may be of benefit for consultation or interloan borrowing within the region.
